The County Fair.

The eighth annual fair of the Crow Wing County Agricultural Society closed on Saturday last. Owing to the drizzling rain on Friday, and the delay in making arrangements for the fair, it was not a success financially as last year, the expenses exceeding the receipts quite a little. The display of all kinds of farm produce was excellent, fully equal to former years, and as good as can be seen at any fair in the state. The exhibits by our merchants were very good, although there were not as many as there should have been. The attendance was small except the last afternoon. The following is a list of the premiums awarded:

Deerwood News.

School has begun with Medora E. Dresser as teacher.

The rainfall we had last Sunday was a good thing for the fires that are raging west of here.

The time for digging potatoes has arrived, but alas for the farmers, they won't get very much for them this year.

The farmers are now busy threshing beans, which they are shipping to Aitkin to sell. The beans are not as nice this year as they were last.

The season for hunting ducks and partridges is here. There are not as many hunters here this year as there was last on account of the scarcity of game.

The boys here are thinking of starting a debating club. This is a good idea. Keep it up boys; show that you mean something by it, and make the debating club a reality.

The settlers from Deerwood, that are working for the government at Sandy Lake dam, are expected to come home by the time the lakes freeze up.

FARMER BOY.

A Family of Artists.

The Noss Jollities, a superior musical organization, will appear at the opera house Saturday evening, Oct. 10th. The following from the St. Cloud Times, will give our readers an idea of the merits of this excellent company:

The Noss family presented their musical novelties before an appreciative audience at the opera house last evening. It is a wonderful family, and each one of them plays from one to a dozen instruments, while in the descriptive piece, "the sleighing party," Bertha throws in an extra one to make it good measure, actually playing on thirteen different instruments during the one piece. This little girl is certainly a child wonder. She can play almost any instrument, can sing well, acts above the average, and in the "Dress Parade, Inspection and the Charge," she caught the audience. The saxophone quartette, mandolin quartette, and ocarina trio, were also pleasing numbers in the olio. The musical absurdity, "A Quick Match," contained plenty of fun and closed a very enjoyable entertainment. It is not a company with one star and a lot of wooden men and women for support but every member of the family is an artist.

STORY OF A MONARCH.

Hardships Suffered by King Frederick the Great in His Youth.

King Frederick the Great, who was born Jan. 24, 1712, had a stormy time of it in his youth, as all readers of history may remember. His father was a stern man, who placed military drill and knowledge above everything else, and when the young man manifested a liking for literature and music the old monarch's rage was excited. His conduct toward his son became so harsh that the Queen arranged for the boy's secret flight to England. Two lieutenants were to accompany him. The King discovered the plan just after the party had left and sent soldiers after them. Young Frederick and one of his companions were captured, but the other escaped, owing to the fleetness of his horse. The prisoners were brought back to Potsdam, handcuffed like common criminals, and thrown into separate dungeons. A sister of Frederick, who ventured to remonstrate, was thrown from a window. The King resolved that his son should be executed. "He will always be a disobedient subject," he argued, "and I have three other boys who are more than his equals." The young man's life was saved through the intercession of Charles VI, Emperor of Austria, but the lieutenant who had been captured was executed, before the window of the room in which the Prince was confined. Finding that he could not send his son to the gallows, the brutal old King had him sent to the fortress of Austria, where he was to be imprisoned for life. He was treated with extreme rigor, being allowed to see no one, and having no books or writing materials with which to while away the tedious of his confinement. After the lapse of a year his father resented sufficiently to allow the young man to return to Berlin. He gradually grew to think better of him, but he could never forgive his disinclination for the science of war or his love of music and literature.

ENTS for Inventions

With the interest of those having claims to the government is that of INVENTORS, who see the benefit of valuable inventions in the hands of the government. Attorneys, employed to obtain their patents, have made the expense in employing them and relieving the solicitors to prosecute, for the value of a patent depends on its utility, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

The view of protecting inventors from fraud or unfair competition, and of securing to them the fruits of their inventions are well protected by valid patents. The PATENT PRICES BUREAU has been successful in its patent practice, and more prepared to
